2019

What are the Open Source Automation Days?

The Open Source Automation Days is the largest, vendor independent, Open Source Conference in Munich. OSAD deals with the automation in Data Centers based on Linux- and Open Source Software. On two days, experts discuss state-of-the-art technologies, innovations, the experiences with them and the many benefits of automation in Data Centers.

The Core Topics

Every data center profits from automation. Data center automation frees capacities and allows them to be used for future innovation. The topics discussed at OSAD are essential to automation today and in the future.

- Lifecycle Management
- Cloud and Hybrid Cloud Infrastructures
- Cloud-Native Applications
- Container Platforms
- Artificial Intelligence
- Configuration Management

How we do it

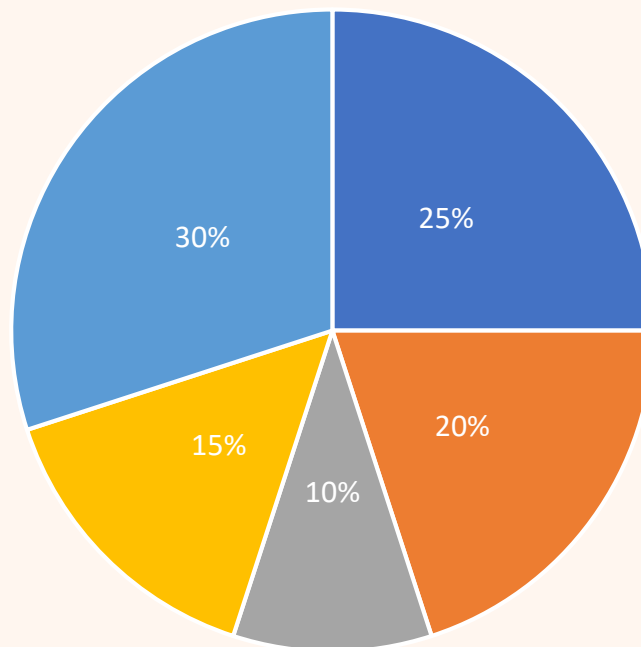

The participants have the choice of two tracks of presentations. The strategic or the technical track. The presentations are given by experts in their fields and accompanied by lectures, live demos, conversations and discussions with users and developers. The participants can mix-and-match the presentations freely, and shape their OSAD experience as they desire.

Who are the participants in the OSAD?

We expect more than a hundred fifty participants from industry, finance and public institutions. OSAD's audience consists of decision-makers and users.

- CTOs and CIOs
- Systems and network administrators
- Developers, Engineers and Datacenter architects
- IT decision makers and managers responsible for large and complex IT environments

Expected Audience Breakdown
